that the republicans have a most the composer to be studied. excellent opportunity to carry Kentucky in the gubernatorial race this year. We do not know whether Senator Blackburn made this statement or not; indeed with the memory of the many battles in democracy's behalf waged in the past by the loyal leader, we sincerely hope that he did not. However disappointment, especially that colored with political ambition, often leads men into strange paths, and in view of recent events, that have happened in Kentucky politics in the days not long gone. It is possible that a cloud of resentment has obscured the crstwhile clear vision of the Kentucky senator, bringing forth words that came with ill grace from one who for lo! these many years has eaten bountifully at the table of democracy. Then, too, in view of the recent appointment by President Roosevelt of the ex-Senator to a federal position which pays fourteen thousand dellars a year, can it be that the glamor of the new environments, the call of strange voices, add the tempting allurments of a snug berth beneath the kindly wing of federal patronage, has caused the old war horse to forget the old friends of the past, and to turn from the beaten paths of the old days into the alluring fields, that lead vinced Senator Cullom that he was along the primrose path of momenwhen he expressed the opinion that a tary promise?
